France sends warplanes to Chad

PARIS, April 27 (R). — Six French air force Jaguar fighter- bombers arrived in the strife-torn African republic of Chad today, apparently marking further French commitment to its former colony, informed sources said here. The six warplanes arrived at N'djamena airport from Dakar, Senegal, together with a C-135 tanker for in-flight re-fuelling, the sources said. Their arrival coincided with reports in N'djamena that columns of the rebel Frolinat movement were resuming their march towards the capital. A series of frolinat successes against government forces in recent weeks has led France to send troop reinforcements to Chad, and an evacuation of french civilians is under way.

Lebanese parliament approves plan private ban

BEIRUT, April 27 (R). — The Lebanese parliament today urged the government to ban private militias and Palestinian guerrilla activity as a major step towards resolving the country's severe internal problems.

All 74 deputies at an extraordinary session of the singlehouse parliament approved a plan aimed at restoring the go-vernment's authority over the country's beavily-armed political and religious factions.

The six-point formula, worked out be leading politicians, laid special emphasis on security as a basis for reconciling the Christian, Moslem and Palestinian communities.

Political analysts said the proposals were unlikely to be onplemented in the near future and were regarded more as a declaration of principles for the next government. Today's vote was a personal success for President Elias Sarkis, He has been pressing privately for strong curbs on the rival gunmen who have blocked moves to heal the deep divisions left by the 1975-76 civil war.

House Speaker Kamel As'ad told reporters that parliament had clearly reflected the desire of the people for unity and peace. Dr. Hoss said: "What happened was a positi-ve step which we hope will be followed by others."

Dawn of Lebanese reconciliation?

A new Lebanese cabinet is about to be formed under the influence of two recent developments which now dominate the scene in the country: the Israeli occupation of south Lebanon and the resignation of the cabinet of technocrats, which, according to a passing reference by former Premier Selim Al Hoss, might have been calculated to break the deadlock over national reconciliation among the country's warring factions.

As it stands, despite overly optimistic utterances to the contrary, national reconciliation has not yet taken place. Whatever agreement exists so far is of the nature of a declaration of principles or a possible basis for reconciliation at some future date, approved by a parliament which has ceased to be representative of public opinion in the country and which reflects trends that existed prior to the outbreak of the civil war three years ago.

It would be overly sanguine to imagine that the country's warlords are about to undermine their own power bases by disbanding their private militias of their own free will, unless they plan to reenlist their men in a national army that will take orders from factional leaders rather than the legally constituted authority in the country.

Nor is it likely that the Palestinians or their leftist allies will accept anything more than a temporary ban on their operations against Israel from Lebanese soil, for the simple reason that they have nowhere else to go. As for Israeli withdrawal from south Lebanon, desirable as this may be, no group of Lebanese politicians can either order or legislate that state of affairs into being.

As though to drive home the fragile nature of the national reconciliation that exists to date, Beshir Gemayel, leader of the rightwing militias, has let it be known that as long as the Palestinians are there "we cannot say that the war has ended."

From the looks of things, the only reconciliation that exists is that between the country's traditional Maronite and Muslim Sunni leaders. This is no great achievement, as the latter have lost almost all vestiges of their former power.

Such an agreement was demanded by Mr. Pierre Gemayel's Phalangist Party at the outset of the civil war. Whereas it is more feasible now that the left has been more or less thoroughly crushed, it will at best take things back to where they were at the end of the first, and more limited, civil war in 1958. Such a situation will inexorably lead right back to 1975, and presages another possible catastrophe against which former Interior Minister Salah Salman has warned.

Indeed, Lebanese politicians of various persuasions, including Mr. Pierre Gemayel, are agreed that without national detente catastrophe is inevitable. The resignation of the Al Hoss cabinet has put the fat in the fire. Whether this latest in a long series of abortive Lebanese agreements manages to outdo the record of its predecessors will depend on how much effect Israel's occupation of south Lebanon will have, and on how the country's leaders will choose to tackle the problem. It will also depend on whether the Lebanese have decided to give each other a square deal, one that does justice to all sides.

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

Commenting on what it described as the historic meeting between His Majesty King Hussein and Yugoslav President Josef Tito, AL DUSTOUR said Thursday that it was only natural that the Arab issue should figure prominently in the two leaders' discussions as it did in the speeches they exchanged at a dinner party last night.

The newspaper notes the solid insistence in the two speeches on supporting the everlasting rights of the Palestinian people on their own land as well as their right to self-determination. Added to this was President Tito's call on the Arabs to forego their differences and unite their ranks, because solidarity is the indispensable focal point for concerted action. President Tito's appeal shows "to what extent Arab differences were causing worry to their friends and to those who believe in the justice of our cause," Al Dustour says. Arab solidarity has become not only an Arab necessity but also a pressing demand by those friends in order that they may continue their effective support of the Arab issue, Al Dustour

The newspaper praises President Tito's undaunting support of the Arah rights and his unreserved condemnation of Israel, when he described its policy as far from conducive to peace,

On the same subject the Amman weekly AKHBAR AL USBOU expects that King Hussein's visit to Yugoslavia will further promote Jordanian-Yugoslav relations in various fields. It saya the visit, the first the King bas ever made to this European country, will be welcomed in both Jordan and Yugoslavia and favourably received in the Arab world at large.

Agricultural cooperatives help farmers to flex their collective bargaining muscles

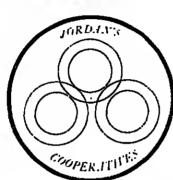

This is the second of a three-part series in which the Jordan Times investigates cooperatives, both agricultural and non-agricultural, in Jordan. Today's article looks in particular at the role cooperatives play in farming in Jordan.

By Ian Kellas Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN, April 26 — "The cost has shot up" he said, and the little gathering of farmers in the committee room all nod-ed in sympathy. Now it will cost you more than JD 30 to cultivate a dunum. In 1971, he said, the figure was JD nine.

The manager of the tobacco growers cooperative at Taybe.
Mr. Mohammad Ismail, was talking about the profit squeeze that has been threatening to push his members out of busi-

But, the manager conti-nued, the crisis seems to have been averted at least for the moment. The cooperative, he said with a bit of a gleam in bis eye, has been able to stand up to the cigarette factory and demand better prices. It has also invested in labour-saving harvesting machines that will cut costs significantly.

The Taybe cooperative is one of more than a hundred agricultural "multi-purpose" societies in Jordan, All together, there are about 10,000 farmers in the country who helong to the cooperative movement and their numbers have been growing fast recently.

Cooperatives are responsible for about half the tobacco production in the country, and the one at Taybe which covers the area of Amman and its suburbs is the biggest. It was set up in 1971 when the JCO made it clear it could not go on providing credit to individual farmers for ever. In that year it had 16 members. Now it boasts

The visible manifestation of the cooperative is a large, gaily-painted store a few kilometres from the city centre. As we drove up to it a team of men were loading sacks of fertiliser into a lorry. The past couple of years have been too dry to grow much tobacco and so the surplus space at the store has been rented out to the Jordan Cooperative Society which uses it for stocking the agricultural supplies that it buys to sell cheap to its me-

Run on democratic lines

Above the stores, there are offices and a large hall, where all the members of the cooperative meet at least once a year to discuss the business of their society and to elect a new management committee.

Jordan's cooperatives are run on democratic lines, Mr. Ismall is the manager of the cooperative and he is appointed by the JCO. But if the farmers do not like him they can demand that he be removed. The idea is that cooperative members should eventually pay salary themselves. Even now it is the assembly of cooperative members who have the final say in the important decisions and one official admitted rueoften refuse to take the JCO's advice.

The hall where members meet can also be hired out for

And there has been reason to celebrate In 1974, according to Mr. Ismail, the stores saved the cooperative the sum of JD 20,000.

Before the stores were built the tobacco farmers used to hand their crop straight to the cigarette factory to be graded and stored Dissatisfied with the price they were offered by the tobacco company in 1974, the cooperative resolved to flex their collective bargaining muscles. They refused to sell, and instead kept their whole crop in the store.

In the end, Mr. Ismail recounted it was the company which gave in and not only paid for the costs of storage but also offered a much higher price for the tobacco,

There is clearly a lot to be said for acting as a group. The cooperative has insisted on having a bigger say in the way their crop is graded by the company Mr. Ismail, who rep-resents the farmers on the government committee which fixes the price of cigarettes, feels that he is now in a much stronger position to defend their interests. And the society has even taken over the business of renting land on hehalf of its memhers, very few of whom have land of their own, Acting as a group the tobacco farmers have been able to extract more favourable terms from land-owners than they could have done individually.

Indirect belo for non-members Mr. Ismail claims that the cooperative has done a lot even for those farmers who are not members of the society. Until the cooperative was formed, the cigarette company provided almost all the credit and services available to tobacco growers. By presenting it with a bit of competition the cooperative thinks that it has forced the company to improve the terms that it offers to its client farmers.

The members of the Taybe cooperative come from a wide area and do not have much in common except for their tobacco. In other cooperatives it is different. Some are formed from members of the same village or even family. No cooperative has gone as far as communalising the land of its memhers. But near Irbid cooperative societies have got their members to exchange pieces of land, sow and plough the land communally and introduce quite new agricultural techniques.

The land around Irbid is dry and much of it has been impoverished by poor farming. To boost output the practice of ploughing up and down hill along narrow strip fields must be stopped. Otherwise the ra-infall merely rushes down hill, carrying with it the precious top soil. Instead, the fields should be ploughed along the contours and a light chisel plough used so that the soil is not dried out too much. The technology is well known and the JCO has been trying to persuade farmers of its effectiveness by setting up demonstration farms. The terms of the Five Year Plan have given the JCO the responsibility of raising agricultural output in certain sectors by introducing better materials and knowhow. This is the importance of the manager-experts who are attached in an advisory capacity to cooperative branches.

Tobacco being hung out to dry.

farmers work together. tractor, for instance, can be used to do contour ploughing if farmers agree to join their strip fields together - at least tem-purarily. The JCO has no hope of altering patterns of landowning, since the rules which govern this are based on the Islamic sharia. And officials at the JCO feel that it is hard enough getting people to co-operate at all, without introducing the explosive question of ownership.

But the JCO feels that it can do something. "If we can achieve a pooling of services for these fragmented pieces of land" former JCO Director General Marwan Dudin said, "then we are dealing with the most serious problems'

Doctors meet to combat fragmentation in medical science in Jordan

By a Jordan Times Staff reporter

danian Annual Medico-Surgical Meeting opened here today with the reading of a wide range of technical papers.

AMMAN, April 27 — The Jor-

Among the estimated participants there are five dis-tinguished guests from abroad. They are: Dr. Michael Riley, a top Loodon surgeoo; Dr. Ali Murtada and Dr. Paul Ghaluoly, both from Cairo and famous for their work in eye diseases and in eodocrinology respectively; Dr. Marwan Uweida, from the American University of Beirut and Dr. Ole Sechur, a well known anaesthetist from

The two-day meeting, the first in which the Jordan surgical and medical societies have met jointly, will hear forty papers dealing mainly with research which has been carried out in Jordan. A report will be given for instance about the work which the King Hussein Medical Centre has been doing in heart surgery.

The chairman of the meeting. Dr. Nabih Mu'ammar, told the Jordan Times that the conference was an attempt to combat the tendency towards fragmentation in medical science. In his openiog address he pointed out that over the last decade scientific knowledge has doubled, making it more and more difficult for doctors to keep abreast of the latest developments outside their own specialities. For this reason, most of the papers at the me-eting cover general subjects which would be of interest to specialists from every field of surgery and internal medicine.

Specialised conferences on the middle ear, say, or the hip joint are anyway not possible in Jordan, Dr. Mu'ammar cootinued, because the number of specialists here in any one field is so limited. The total oumber of surgeons and physicians in the country is estimated at not much above 250. Lining the walls of the lobby at the Professional Associatioos Complex where the me-eting is taking place, is a display of drugs and medical equipmeot. And one participant at the meeting who was not meotioned on the official lists but who was obviously taking ao amused view of the proceedings was ... a plastic skelet-

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP). — The U.S. Supreme Court, over strong dissents by four of its nine members, ruled yes-

Israel plans major changes in business laws to attract more foreign investments

NEW YORK, April 27 (AP). — The government of Israel outlined its new foreign business policies last night, hoping proposed changes in its laws will increase investments in the country. Mr. Uriel Lynn, newly appointed North American Director of the Government of Israel Investment Authority, said his government wants to increase that number and encourage expansion of existing companies, particularly in sophisticated technology. WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP). — The Senate yesterday approved a $498.9 billion United states Budget for next year that includes slightly less in overall spending and a bit more money for defence.

The proposed spending plan for the fiscal year starting on Oct. 1. which views inflation as a greater problem than a sluggish American economy, was approved on a 64-27 vote and sent to the House of Representatives for consideration.

The House and Senate have until May 15 to agree on a te-ntative budget. The figures will guide Congressional committees as they coosider bills between now and Oct. 1. On that date, the figures will become binding limits on speoding and tax cuts for the suc-

President Jimmy Carter has recommended a net reduction of about $24 billioo, effective Oct. 1. The Senate budget thus would accommodate the same rate of Carter's tax cut, but only for nine months of fiscal 1979.

The budget assumes U.S. defeoce spending of $116.6 bil-

Big business takes over Italy's cigarette smuggling as the lira's drop against Swiss franc makes one-man operations unprofitable

By Norris Willatt

NAPLES (F.T.) - Marlboroughs. Camels and other cheap supplies of American cigarettes are difficult to come by in Naples at the present time; the cigarette smugglers are on strike. At least, most of them are, in indignation that their perennial opponents in the local version of cops and robbers, the Guardia di Finanza, are playing the game too hard. The Guardia di Finanza, or Finance Guard, a para-military organisation responsibla for fighting crime in the areas of finance and taxation, has re-cently extended both the scope of its activity in the bay of Naples itself and the severity of its anti-smuggling me-

This has interfered with the thriving cigarette smuggling trade in the region, involving the transfer of cargoes, mainly in Greece, from ocean going vessels out in the bay to fast motor boats which bear them ashore to contacts in the port of Naples and adjoining communities. The contacts pass them on to wholesalers and retailers.

Neapolitans, some 40,000 or so of whom are said to get their living, directly or indirectly, from the illicit trade, consider this interference a dirty business. Even the communist Mayor of Naples, Signor Maurizio Valenzi, with 120,000 or so unemployed from a total population of 1.5 m. has urged the zealots of the guard to relax their vigilance and let people get on with earning a dishonest liv-

But the guardsmen won't listen. One of the few central government agencies which seems to take its duties aeriously, and busy enough trying to cope with similar offences such as tax evasion and currency smuggling, the Guardia seems unrelenting in its war on contraband.

Day to day incidents betwe-en law breakers and law enforcers often take on the scenario of a 007 film. In a combined land-sea operation in Naples bay one night in the middle of March, one patrol from the Guardia intercepted a 400-ton ship. Flying a Panamanian flag. with a Greek skipper, and the appropriate name of "Seven Dark" the ship lay about 50 miles out to from Capri. The guard confiscated its cargo of contraband smokes.

Meanwhile, other tackled two of the "blue mo-torboats" of the delivery service, one about 10 miles south of Capri and the other in the vicinity of the community of Torre Annunziata. It took six attempts to board the vessels in a rough sea. Crewmen arm-ed with sticks and axe handles put up a battle in which members of the guard were badly injured. At the same time, still other members of the force struck at bases of the smugglers on land. The net result of the exercise was the seizing of a tonand-a-half of cigarettes, with an estimated commercial value of about 300 m. lire (around £185,000). The round-up also resulted in the sequestration of a lorry, four cars, seven radio transmitters and other

This showed the disposition and routes both of the contraband fleet and vessels of the guardia patrol

A team in the beadquarters, equipped with highly sophisticated electronic devices, and usine powerful radio transmitter-receivers, was busy directing operations throughout the bay. It had also the capacity to Intercept the instructions from the guard to patrols. This action cleared up the mystery of why the smugglers were so often successful in evading capture,

Among the booty seized in this raid were lists of expec-ted cargoes, with dates and times of arrival; various weapons: a fair amount of cash; and even a quantity of cocaine. This last haul confirmed the bypothesis that regular cigarette smuggling is tied in with drug smuggling in the

Mafia involvement

The scale of the operation also seemed to establish that the routine business is now being run by very powerful interests (including possibly the Mafia?). What was once an industry of smaller intrepreneurs is now in the hands of racketeers who expect big pickings.

For many years the prototype of the cigarette smuggler was an inhabitant of the Chiasso area of the Swiss-Italian border who humped cartons of smokes over the frontier through the hills, getting paid so much for each load. This trade thrived in the fifties and sixties, but in the seventies bas dwindled to almost nothing.

One reason for the demise of this traffic is that the Italian lire has become so devalued in terms of the Swiss franc that the price of contraband duty free cigarettes from Switzerland delivered in Milan (the main destination) is now very little below that of smokes imported through regular channels, with duty

At the same time, the small smuggler has seen his business taken away by big, well organised gangs who are much more daring and ruthless in their methods. The activities in the bay of Naples area are an indication both of scale of their operations and the brazenness of their methods.

Other big time racketeers are said to have organised a massive regular traffic in ci-garettes derived from sources in countries such as West Germany and Holland. The contraband is trans-shipped disguised as other merchandi-se, in TIR lorries across the northern borders of Italy with Switzerland, France and Aust-

Cigarette smuggling is big business. In the first ten months of 1977 alone, the Guardia di Finanza officers intercepted some 820 tons of contraband tobacco products, duty on which would have amounted to some 23,000 m. lire (about £15 m.). This baul also involved the sequestration of around 2,000 lorries and 200 boats. What got past the guards is known only to the smugelers, and to Italian sm-

Practical formulation an integrated programme proves to be extremely difficult raw materials and foods

By Grog Smosarski of the Financial Times, London

LONDON (F.T.) - The idea of a UN-sponsored Integrated Programme for Commodities (IPC) was launched at a me-eting of the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in Nairobi, May 1976. It is still little more than an Idea; the practical formulation of the IPC is proving extremely difficult.

Ideally, policies of a wellordered pragmatism are required whereby commodities trading would be kept more or ; less uniformly remunerative to producers and equitable to cocount of the changing world economic climate and promote equilibrium between supply and demand.

The operation of the poli-cies would be through the medium of international commodity agreements. Such agsetting up of buffer stocks so that a commodity can be bought when prices reach an agreed minimum and sold when they reach an agreed maxi-

Conferences to discuss world supplies and demand of coffee. cocoa, sugar, wheat, and tin, existed prior to the conception of IPC. UNCTAD promotes conferences to get agreements on other major raw materials such as jute, hard fibre, tea, iron ore, copper, manganese, phosphates, tropical timber and vegetable oils. Progress on these has been extremely slow. On baubeen virtually nonexistent.
Only rubber is on schedule, and a fully-fledged negotiating conference has been called for October-November of this year. If it succeeds, and there is a good chance that it will, IPC could declare a rubber The vagaries of the prices of many of the world's raw materials and foods often leave producers starved of income and consumers out of pocket. A UN-sponsored programme of commodity market stabilisation is itself in deep trouble.

agreement by the end of the year -- the original deadline set for agreements on all the eighteen commodities with which the programma is con-

Bright hopes for copper

Copper too is a commodity for which hopes are reasonably bright. This is despite the fact that successive conferences have tended to cover the same negotiating ground time and time again, and then pass their disagreements on to experts who similarly make little orogress. Even the maior members of the copper producers' association, CIPEC, have failed to agree among production cutback despite the aresent very depressed price of the metal.

Nevertheless, the view is widely beld that uneconomic prices will soon force producers to seek an international agreement, while worries about long term supplies will bring the consumers into line. Even a producers' agreem-

from transpational corporations who would be most unhappy about the inclusion of export controls as a supporting strategy. But past experience has shown that a copper agreement is likely to be re-ached when prices are very low and the producers under pressure. This was certainly the case

ent could run into opposition

with the International Sugar Agreement which was negotiated last year, even though sugar prices are still much lower than the negotiators intended. The International Sugar Agreement imposes export quoprices fall below a minimum. But the rush to buy and sell during the last few months of 1977, and so beat the export deadline, left comfortable stocks in most of the consumer countries. This situation has been aggravated by the fact that the EEC, a major exporter, is not a partner to the agreement and is not bound by the export limits. The position may improve as stocks are used up but not all the analysts are happy that this will happen soon enough to please the other major producers. A further criticism levelled at the sugar agreement is that the delegates, in their enthusiasm to succeed, approved export quotas that were much too high. These attracted a commendable number of producers to join the agree-ment, but left the market oversupplied. This kind of situation is a consequence of agreements usually being negotiated by diplomats and politicians rather than by experts in the commodity trade under discussion.

Not enough experts >

It is up to individual governments to appoint their delegates to these conferences. Some governments, particular-ly those of the developed nations, are better than others at choosing trade experts. Many developing countries simply do not have any experts to appoint, The UNCTAD secretariat itself does not include one person who has the experlence of working for a commodity trading bouse.

This lack of expertise and of informed and well-discipilned pragmatism has beset IPC from its very inception. And only last December a conference discussing the IPC Common Fund broke down inconclusively. The developed countries wanted to keep the fund oriented solely towards the financing of buffer stocks, while the developing nations wanted to be able to draw on it for their development projects.

IPC's difficulties have undoubtedly dealt a blow to the veloping countries. And they contrast sharply with hopes of a new economic order aimed at giving the developing countries a greater share of the world's wealth.

The developing countries' problems are compounded by their lack of suitable guidance towards making more realistic demands in nursuance of aspirations. UNCTAD officials would like to see the Group of 77 (develooing countries) set up their own small research organisation to provide them with statistics and other background information.

Such a body would also have the advantage of restoring the neutral reputation of UNCTAD. At present tha UNCTAD secretariat receives requests aplenty for technical help from developing countri-es' delegates who do not know where else to turn. Because UNCTAD does help them ow it is sometimes accused of having a permanent bias in favour of the Third World. But it would be unfair to blame the developing countries for all the stagnation by which IPC is beset. Just be-fore Easter of this year, the conference negotiating a new wheat agreement adjourned amid statements of optimism. but without any concrete achievement beyond a date for reconvening. The adjournment was caused by n split between two developed country consumers, the USA and tha EEC. -- Financial Times News-Features

SWAPO will accept Israelis reportedly Namibia plan under rob grave of Biblical specified conditions

WINDHOEK, Namibia April 27 (AP). — An official of the South West Africa People's Organisation said today that SWAPO President Sam Nujoma is likely to accept the Western plan for the independence of this territory if certain issues are "clarified". Lucia Muhutenya, SWAPO's Secretary for Legal Affairs, told the South African Press Association: "There is a likelihood of Mr. Nujoma accepting the proposals if the West fully cooperates with Mr. Nujoma on the clarification of certain issues."

king in south Lebanon

BEIRUT, April 27 (R). - The daily newspaper at Safir vesterday said Israeli archaeologists have removed priceless antiquities from the tomb of a Biblical Phoenician king in Israeli-occupied south Lebanon.

The newspaper, quoting local villagers, said the Israelis on Tuesday took golden and marble statues, three burial caskets and a collection of brass and pottery from the tomb of King Hiram of Tyre (969-935 B.C.).

The burial ground lies near the village of Hannawiye, 8 kms. southwest of the ancient port city of Tyre.

King Hiram is said in the Bible to have provided King

Solomon of Israel with tons of timber and thousands of wor-kers for the construction of the Temple of Jerusalem. The paper quoted the villagers as saying Israeli soldiers stood guard as the experts, flown in by military helicopter, took the objects from the tomb. They said that after several hours, they saw the antiquities being loaded into the helicopter which then flew southwards

Al Safir said one golden statue was of one of King Hiram's sons, while the marble figures represented other kings of the same era. Judging by the Book of Kings in the old testament, the brass may be particularly valuable.

The Bible says King Hiram inherited great skill as a brassworker from his father, and personally fashioned buge pillars of brass for the Jerusalem Temple.

Soviet-West diplomatic clash likely after South African acceptance of Namibia plan

By Serge Schmemann

JOHANNESBURG. Africa (AP). - South Africa's acceptance of the Western settlement plan for South West Africa has set the scene for a head-on diplomatic clash between the Soviets and the West over Africa.

Foreign Secretary Donald
Jamieson of Canada, speaking for all five Western authors of the South West African Settle-ment Plan, said nn Tuesday that the Westero blueprint for a democratic transition to an independent Namibia, as the territory also is known, was on a "take-it-or-leave-it" basis. South West Africa is administered by South Africa and a settlement could mean independence by December 31, "We are not speaking of concessions one way or another," Mr. Jamieson declared at the United Nations in New York, where South West Af-rica is currently the subject of debate in a epecial General Assembly session.

A Soviet veto would be a challenge by the Russians to the United States, Britain Canada, France and West Germany, since by officially sponsor-ing the plan and by winning South Africa's acceptance the five have taken responsibility for its success or failure.

of South Africa stressed this point in his letter of acceptance Tuesday when he said: "Bearing in mind ... the assurance by the five Western powers on the Security Council that their proposals are now in a final and deflattive form, and that the five are giving them their unreserved backing, the South African government accepts these proposals."

Should the Soviets reject the plan, the Western five would appear to be bound to re-cognise a South Africa-backed "internal settlement" in the territory, whose population is made up of 722,000 blacks and

Rhodesia next

How the Russians, South Africans and Western powers resolve the issue could in turn determine how they tackle Rhodesia, a far more complex problem since an internal settlement already exists there, a guerrilla war is in full force and South Africa has only a limited ability to direct the course of events. In Rhodesia, the British and Americans have limited themselves to a set of negotiable proposals and to promoting, again and again, a meeting of "all parties concerned" - - Prime Minister Ian Smith, black moderates Bisbop Abel Muzo-rewa, the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole and Senator Jeremiah Chirau, and guerrilla leaders Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe. Success in Namibia, however, could embolden the British and Americans to assume a tougher stance and to promote their own Rhodesian plan with greater force

The West'e role in Namibia was enthusiastially welcomed by both liberals and conservatives in South Africa, where the United States has been seen in recent years as helpless in the face of a Soviet and Cuban presence on the continent.

Soviet-West difference

Among the most cherished concepts on this continent of tribally and ideologically divided nations is "territorial integrity", and that is what the Russians and Cubans defended in Angola, Mozambique and Ethiopia. At the same time the Soviets consistently backed black African attacks in international forums against the "racist regimes" of Southern Africa, while the West appeared to support South Africa with trade and Security Co-uncil vetoes of economic san-

ASK OMAR

Q .- I am confused about the leads of high bonors against opposing no trump con-tracts. Can you shed any light on this subject?-N. Simpson, Montreal, P.Q.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.) A.-A very good question in-deed. Since it makes no diference which card you lead from holdings that contain equals (king-queen nr ace-king), a specific meaning can be assigned to each card:

a) The lead of the ace: The lead of the ace asks partner to either unblock or to give count. Typically, it is made from holdings such as AKJ10x nr AKJxxx. You want to know whether partner has the queen or, if not, how many cards he has in the suit.

If partner has the queen, he

If partner has the queen, he must play it under the ace. Nnw you know that you can run the suit. If partner does not have the queen, he must give you count, i.e., he must play low with an odd number of cards, or start an echo (high-low) with an even number. Consider the second holding. Ynu lead the ace, dummy has a dnuhleton and partner plays a low card. Partner has either a singleton in the suit led or three low. If partner has a singleton, he will not be able to singleton, he will not be able to lead through declarer's marked queen. (Remember, partner can't have the queen—he didn't unblock.) Therefore, you might as well continue with the ace. If partner started with three cards in the suit, declarer's queen will drop. If not, you will have to abandon the cuit since declarer will still be poised with the Q-10 over your jack. You can work out the other combinations for yourself.

(h) The lead of the king: This asks partner for his attitude, i.e., whether or not he wants the suit continued. A typical holding for this lead could be AK10x. If partner likes the suit. he plays a high card, asking you to continue; if not, he plays low, and you can switch. With Qxx, or length in the suit, partner would want you to continue, so he would play the higher of his spot cards. With Jxx he would prefer a switch, so he plays the lower. The king is also led from combinations such as AKx or KQx where you might be trying to hit part-ner's lnng suit.

c) The lead of the queen: This lead is usually the top of a sequence that includes the jack and either the ten or the nine. and either the ten or the nine. However, it may also be a request for partner to unblock the jack, if be has it. You would lead the queen from KQ109x because you can continue the suit safely if partner drops the jack. Remnve the ten from that holding and your correct lead would be a low correct lead would be a

A.—Well, count me among the complete idiots on both hands. In (a). I realize that partner is bidding under pressure, but he must have something to venture on the four-leval on a bad; suit—after all, I'm looking at the AQ in his suit. Just three kings and a singleton spade would give us a good play for elam. I would raise to five hearts, expecting partner to bid a slam if he has only one spade loser. one spade loser.

Matters are considerably different with hand (h). Here part-ner quite possibly could have pothing but good bearts. I can't say I'm thrilled with the prospect of passing, but the auction has developed terribly for me. Introducing the clob suit in an effort to improve the contract could have disastrous results, for if nn fit exists, it's quite likely the opponents will doubla any five-level contract.
